Figuring out life one educated guess at a time

About that time eh?

So here I sit, a year and a half after starting my transition working on taking the next step. SRS... “The big one.” How do I know this is right? How do I know I won’t regret it? How do I know everything will be fine, wait... no... scratch that... amazing? Quite frankly, I don’t. But there hasn’t been a point on this journey I’ve looked back longingly. Nor a point where I’ve regretted going down this path. I know it won’t fix my stresses about money, my house, job, or anything else. But I firmly believe it will help me, which is kind of the point of this whole thing. All the bad days, weeks, and months. All the fears and concerns. All of it was done out of the belief that it would help me. It was a correct belief for the record.

So, what’s the purpose of this blog? Well, it was started primarily to be able to share my experiences with SRS, as well as transitioning in general. But I’m sure I’ll post musings from other realms and whatever is really going on. Do I think I’m that interesting? Not really. But I do think that it could be another resource (even if it helps only one other person... it’s worth it) for trans individuals. And who knows, perhaps it’ll evolve to minimize that aspect to transition (pun intended) to another type of blog.

I read your whole blog chronologically and I couldn't put it down. I feel like we're almost the same. I'm an engineer at Microsoft and have almost all the same exact feelings you do. I'd love to pick your brain sometime if you don't mind ...

I'm glaf you story ended on a high note!
